

Tristan and Blaine's Year 2004

This year has been quite eventful – though I fear probably not up to the normal Campbell standard of racing around the country or world!

Tristan began the year with a lot of field work, mostly in the South West, doing agricultural work for Geoforce. He is now in charge of developing the environmental and agricultural side of the firm. This is exactly the role that Tristan was hoping for, so it is really exciting for him to take the enviro and ag work in the direction that he feels will be most beneficial. He has been all over the South-West and even managed a project on Barrow Island.

Coast of Barrow Island

The Pilbara – on yet another working trip for Tristan.

April was a very hectic month, with moving into our first home. We managed to score ourselves a bargain in Bayswater – the BIG complex on the corner of Guildford Road and King William. Most people from Perth have either lived there at some stage or know someone who lives there! The townhouse has two bedrooms and a little court yard – so it is just big enough for the two of us...

...Soon to be the three of us. We are expecting our first baby – and first grandchild for both our sets of parents – in mid-late February, which we are both really happy about. Having only just celebrated our first year anniversary in October, it's not quite a honeymoon baby, but nearly! Over the summer we are organizing baby's room, clothes and clearing out unnecessary stuff. The pregnancy is progressing well, just with the usual aches and pains.

First wedding anniversary at Halo's and pregnant

I have been keeping the accounts in line at Geoforce as the bookkeeper and working on the Library for The Glastonbury Company. Of course I am now winding down with work and will finish up in early February if all goes well.

Other than that, we have had a couple of trips down South, and few dramas and lots of fun and love this year. We are both looking forward to Christmas, for time with our respective families and friends.

Wishing you all a happy Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Tristan and Blaine